It's that time of the year when I cull my bookshelf. Nine bookcases of books at the office and four at home is more than I need. I'll put some volumes out on a small table in the hallway for students to take. I'll fondly wish for them a good loving home (the books, not the students). Like most who have spent years in teaching I've seen the subjects on the bookcases change over time as former interests wane and new curiosities, research interests and passions emerge. It didn't take long into my tenure as dean that I noticed the shelf that grew the most had to do with educational leadership.

While the learning curve in the dean's office tends to be satisfied by a different kind of learning than is found "in the classroom," (on the job, mentoring, on-demand learning, problem-solving, self management, etc.) the wisdom and practical knowledge found in books can be helpful. So, what are the resources that can be helpful to a new theological dean whose current library has little to offer in the way of understanding and doing the work of academic leader? Below is a "starter library" for a new dean who needs a "crash course" on how to understand the nature of theological education and how do the work of an educational administrator.

Journals

Lastly, three journals that provide excellent resources for the theological school dean:

Teaching Theology & Religion (Wabash Center)
Theological Education (ATS)
The Academic Leader (Magna)
