Description: Religion matters. After decades of thinking that religion and modernity were on a collision course (with religion destined to fade away as modernity advanced), most careful observers have come to realize that religion remains a powerful force even in modern societies such as the United States. Much of religion’s enduring power derives from the many ways it permeates our lives. It affects us in private and in public, personally and collectively. It is something we feel, and something we do. And while others treasure it as heaven-sent, others believe it is evil incarnate. So it should not be surprising that scholars of religion disagree when it comes to defining “religion.” This course explores various ways in which scholars and practitioners have explained “what religion is all about.” It beings with theories ordinary observers (BU students included) carry around in their heads. Some of these are informed and deeply insightful. Others are caricatures. Our task is to sift through competing views and approaches and see what makes sense.

Objectives: Students will be expected to learn about how human beings have and continue to act religiously, and to question simple conceptions they may have regarding what religion really is and does. They will be exposed to a wide variety of theories (both theological and secular, pro and con) regarding religious beliefs and practices, and will learn to analyze and criticize those approaches. In the process, they will explore their own ideas and values about the world’s religions, and the place of religion in our increasingly global world.

Requirements:
1) Attendance and Class Participation (10%)
2) Two Religious Literacy Quizzes (10% each = 20% total)
3) Short Paper on Lewis and Freud (250 words), due September 25 at the beginning of class (5%)
4) Short Paper (3-4 pages, typed, double-spaced) (10%), due November 20 at the beginning of class (10%). The task is to analyze one of the religious practices or texts considered in this course. Place it in context in terms of (a) historical moment; (b) religious or philosophical tradition(s). Where does this form of religion come from? What were the social and intellectual circumstances surrounding its appearance or creation? Why was it written or developed? Where? For whom? How was/is it similar to or different from other works and practices surrounding and preceding it? If it is a contemporary practice, how has it been transformed by contemporary practitioners? Is it authentic in its contemporary manifestation, or is it a bastardization?
5) Final Project: Make Your Own Religion (25%). Group presentation of a new religion of your own imagining (15%); plus a short individual paper of your own (3-4 pages analyzing your group’s project via such questions as . . . Which theory of religion does it capitalize on? What are its strengths? Weaknesses?) (10%). Group projects will be presented in class and can also have a Web presence. Here are some things you might want to consider in constructing your own religion. Ninian Smart’s 7 "dimensions of religion": ritual; narrative/mythic; experiential/emotional; social/institutional; ethical/legal; doctrinal/philosophical; material. What holidays does your religion celebrate? How does it deal with birth? Death?
What are its key symbols? Beliefs? Practices? How if at all does it deal with the problem of evil? Does it have any interesting moral teachings? Sexual ethic? Does it have a story of creation or of the end of the world? What kinds of institutions does it support? Finally, what is YOUR religion really all about? After all these new religions have presented themselves to the class, we will "vote" on the winners and losers. The winning religion will earn A's for its students on the group presentation portion of this assignment. In-class presentations on December 4-9. Short paper due December 11 at the beginning of class.

6) Final Examination (30%). Date t.b.a. by the Registrar's Office.

Late Papers/Makeup Exams Policy
Exams will not be rescheduled. Papers are due at the beginning of class on the due date. Papers may be handed in late, but will be marked down one half a grade for each day or portion of a day they are late. Exceptions only for illness with doctor's note or death/sickness in the family.
