Course Description

Bart D. Ehrman recently called the Bible “the most frequently purchased, commonly read, passionately believed, and widely misunderstood book in the history of Western civilization.” REL 203 is designed to address the situation of most students knowing more about the Bible than they might think, but also being more confused about that inherited cultural knowledge than they might think. To this end, “Western culture” will be defined and outlined historically for the purposes of the class, as a family of cultures shaped by ideas of the sacred and the secular that were developed in conversation with Greco-Roman and biblical traditions. The class will then will review key examples of biblical tradition, and critical discussions of their place in Western culture. Students will show they can notice biblical traditions at work in Western culture, and think about them critically – both on the spot in real time (in the class discussions and the Midterm exam) and in depth on their own time (in the Responses, Reflections, and Final Paper). Section 1 (January 5 – Feb 16) introduces the materials and problems involved in a Religious Studies approach to “the West” and to biblical traditions. Reflective engagement with the readings and ideas is expected. Section 2 (Feb 21 – April 11) is more “hands-on” and thematic. Students are expected to come prepared for active discussions of key texts and interpretations.

Required Texts

Students will need access to a Bible, preferably an NRSV with both “Old” and “New” Testaments, as well as the “Apocrypha.” Other versions may work just as well, but please ask. The following text is also required:

The Bible. A Very Short Introduction, by John Riches (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2000). Available at The Word bookstore at 469 Milton (514-845-5640).

Students are expected to complete all required readings indicated in the syllabus before coming to class. Lectures and discussions will assume that students have done this prep work. Informed, thoughtful engagement with the required assigned readings must also be demonstrated in the one-page Reading Reflections/Questions.
